

John Martin retains director's post

John Martin, who was appointed Director of the Ohio Department of Developmental Disabilities (DODD) initially by Governor Strickland in January, 2007, has been reappointed by Governor Kasich.

This is the first time that a DODD Director has been reappointed to serve after the election of a new governor.

Governor Kasich announced the decision on January 6th, noting, "John's record of accomplishment is highly impressive. He understands many of the challenges faced by Ohioans with developmental disabilities and their families. John is a man of great character, and I look forward to him serving in my cabinet."

Regarding his reappointment, Director Martin said, "I am honored to continue to serve... I look forward to working with Ohio's developmental disability community under Governor Kasich's leadership."

The agency oversees the state's system of supports and services for more than 80,000 Ohioans with developmental disabilities.

For 23 years before coming to DODD, Director Martin was the Executive Director of Sunshine, Inc. of northwest Ohio, a non-profit organization serving people with developmental disabilities.

His educational background includes a bachelor's degree in Special Education from Illinois State University and a master's degree in Community Psychology from Temple University.

FCBDD Superintendent Jed Morison commented, "We are very pleased that Director Martin will continue to provide leadership at the state level. He has been doing terrific work during very challenging times."

Daphne Hawk is new county recorder

A former FCBDD staff member is Franklin County's newest elected official.

Daphne Hawk was appointed County Recorder by the Franklin County Republican Central Committee on January 13th. She will complete the term that runs through 2012. The position was vacated by Robert Montgomery, who began serving as Probate Judge on January 3rd. She will face the voters in November, 2012.

Daphne was Executive Assistant to then FCBDD Superintendent Steve Pleasnick from 1989 through 1996. Since then, she has been a licensed Realtor and a real estate educator. In her first try at elective office, she was elected Jackson Township Trustee in 2009.

The County Recorder is responsible for maintaining records relating to real estate titles in the county. She also serves on the county's Automated Data Processing Board as well as the Microfilming Board.

Commenting on the appointment, Superintendent Jed Morison said, "Although our agency has very little interaction with the County Recorder, it is an extremely important position. I'm sure that Daphne will do an excellent job."

Daphne and her husband, Keith, make their home in Jackson Township in the Grove City area. They have been members of the Grove City Church of the Nazarene since 1989.

In addition, all of the major restrooms will be rehabilitated to make them more accessible and modern. The Home Economics Room will also be upgraded to allow better teaching of living skills.

The remodeling projects are expected to be completed before the start of the 2011-2012 school year.

ARC North's Beth Stoll retires

by Patti Glick

Beth Stoll, a Training Specialist at ARC Industries North, retired on January 31st after 30 years of service.

Beth started her career as a Bus Assistant in 1980, thanks to a little help from a neighbor who was a staff member. A short time later, she became a Bus Driver, eventually taking the route that she had assisted on.

After seven years, she began working as a substitute Training Specialist. In 1990, she became a full-time Training Specialist at ARC North. She began working in the bin board department, then Sunapple department, and most recently with a general vocational group of eleven individuals.

"Beth has been a very professional and compassionate staff member who has built wonderful relationships with those we serve," said Nan Burns, Director of ARC North.

We wish Beth much happiness in her retirement!

Building better relationships in 2011

by Karen Laub

In a column in The Wall Street Journal last month, Elizabeth Bernstein raised the subject of New Year's resolutions. She suggested that improving interpersonal relationships is a better resolution than improving the state of one's abs. I immediately abandoned any further thought about my stomach muscles, and you may want to reassess your own New Year's resolutions.

Improving relationships sounds easy. You will be tempted to the usual: Trying harder. You will, of course, need to: Try different. Trying different is hard because so much of our lives is lived on automatic pilot. You've probably heard about the folly of doing the same thing over and over again while expecting a different result. If we're going to improve relationships, we're going to have to make that our priority and establish new routines.

Bernstein advises talking to other people. Often when one person feels like talking, the other person does not. This can lead to anger, sometimes including the dreaded "silent treatment" and sometimes spoiling an otherwise "good time."

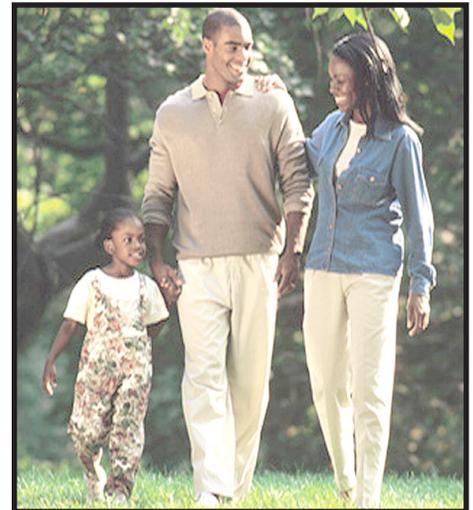

Some talks benefit from being delayed until petty irritation has passed and no talk is needed. Sometimes we need to figure out to whom we really need to talk and schedule a time to really listen and communicate patiently and honestly. Plan ahead by figuring out whether the quality of the relationship is more important than getting what you otherwise think you want.

Some talking should just be fun. I liked Bernstein's suggestion for going outside where the beauty and quietness of the world would reduce stress, and action stimulates talk. Could you walk your child to school one day a week or tend the yard or garden with a family member?

The "old school" practice of family meals, which are associated with healthier eating practices and better school achievement, requires "keeping it pleasant," although you may rudely exclude televisions, phone, etc. Remember how little control you have over what other people do with their mouths, whether it is talking or eating, and avoid fruitless efforts and misery. Remember, the family meal does not have to be dinner. You don't really earn points for every scheduled activity in which you participate nor does your child, so you can still be "a winner" without all of those activities that disrupt family life.

While we are talking "old school," consider the quality of relationships of well-rested persons versus the commonly sleep-deprived American. For example, only 15 percent of adolescents sleep the needed 8 ½ hours, and 26 percent say they sleep 6 ½ hours or less. The practice of routine bed times seems harder to keep these days with competition from work schedules, activities, television, etc. Remember, you may have to try different.

Bernstein recommends friends. People with whom you only talk on the telephone or "on line" are not fully real. Shared activity is commonly the basis for developing friendships, but workplace relationships tend to disappear when work circumstances change. Do something worth doing, with or without a friend, and get someone to do it with you. How? Ask and, if necessary, ask again. Don't let fear of rejection leave you "bowling alone," as Robert Putnam described in his book on the loss and revival of American community.

Regardless of the potential difficulty, we have much to gain by focusing on improving relationships in 2011. Studies show that the quality of our relationships is the best predictor of our personal happiness.

The top team series award went to Cindy Wilcox, Chris Wilcox, Jennifer Coleman, and Eric Jaycox, who totaled 1,820 pins. The team of Susan Nagy, Tanna Blackman, Lynne Johansson and Lynn Banks was recognized for good effort.

Author completes book, shares insights

Overcoming obstacles to achieve one's goals is an oft-repeated story in the Franklin County community. A marvelous example of such can-do spirit is Herb Beatty, a southside resident who receives services through FCBDD.

Herb has pushed himself for the past four years to write a book about his life and religious faith. Titled A Legacy of Faith, the 256-page volume contains a biographical sketch, essays, and sermons he has written for presentation to his church.

"This will give people insight into what I think and care deeply about," he explained. "I didn't want to die and just have the material thrown away."

The 62-year old has received praise over the years for his writing skills, and has put them to use on many "talks" or sermons. "They were read at the pulpit by various people," he said.

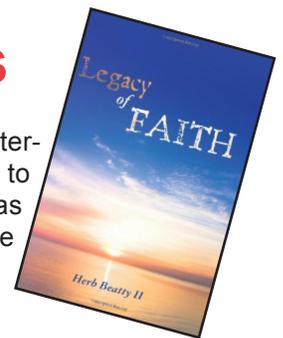

Herb has had cerebral palsy since birth, resulting in a severe speech disability and other physical limitations.

The book takes the perspective of a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, to which Herb has belonged since 1959.

He is "extremely pleased" that the book is finished. "One needs discipline for the lonely task of writing."

A Legacy of Faith by Herb Beatty II was published by Create Space and is available for purchase at Amazon.com.

OSU seeks children for autism study

The Speech Recognition and Aging Lab at the Ohio State University is conducting a study regarding abilities of children to listen to competing messages in different listening conditions. They are recruiting children with a diagnosis of Autism Spectrum Disorder (Autism, Asperger's Syndrome, or Pervasive Developmental Disability Not Otherwise Specified) between the ages of 10 and 15. Testing will be performed at the Columbus campus.

The child will listen to meaningful words in three listening tasks. In one task, the child will listen to words in quiet and be instructed to repeat what he/ she hears. In another task, two words will be presented at a time and the child will be instructed to repeat those words. The final task will present words in a background noise, and the child will be instructed to report what is heard.

Each child will have a full hearing evaluation, including visual examination of their ears, a hearing test, and a test of middle ear function. Each will also participate in screening tests of handedness, social communication, and language.

The full study will take approximately three sessions not exceeding two hours. They will be scheduled at parents' convenience. There will be plenty of time for breaks during each session.

Participants will be compensated for their time in the amount of $10 per session.

The green spot

by Anthony Jackson

Like other FCBDD facilities, the Bixby Living Skills Center has made a commitment to "going green." Our efforts have been multi-faceted. A major focus has been on reducing the amount of water being used. By simply changing the aerators on all of the classroom faucets, our water consumption went down from two and a half gallons to one gallon per minute. This was an easy change that was done at a very low cost.

Also, in many areas in the building, lights have been installed that automatically go off when the room is not in use. This is a big help in saving electric.

Here's something to think about -- our grandparents were greener than we are! Instead of electric washers and dryers, they washed laundry in non-motorized tubs with a wringer to expel excess water. They also hung it outside on the clothesline to dry. Instead of driving, they usually walked or took a bus or a streetcar to get from place to place. So much energy they saved!
